A story of survival

Poly senior Marau Knight overcame fear to put her attacker behind bars

Editors note: This is the fourth and final part of a series examining the treatment of rape victims by courts, Cal Poly, and the media. Today, one local rape victim shares her story.

By John Hubbell
Staff Writer

For 23-year-old Marau Knight, seeing the reflection of death in the eyes of her attacker was hard enough.

Describing it later in court was nearly worse.

"It feels like you're getting assaulted all over again because you have to talk about what happened to you in great detail while he's sitting there," Knight said. "And in my case, he was pretty much smiling the whole time, which made me feel like he was getting pleasure out of it."

Long before the rape trials of William Kennedy Smith and Mike Tyson made reluctant celebrities out of their accusers, there have been thousands of women like Marau Knight — pleasant and otherwise unspectacular people who have been dealt the hellish task of putting their assailant behind bars by describing every detail to the jury.

Indeed, there was little joy to be had in the affair for Knight — a relaxed, sun-drenched Cal Poly human development senior who, two years ago, found her daily run through nearby Perfum Canyon horribly interrupted.

"I was just out running in a place that I ran all the time," Knight said. "Some guy thought it would be a good day to create havoc in someone's life."

That man was Carl Goff, a 19-year-old California Conservation Corps field worker who, under the Feb. 16 midday sun, forced sex from Knight on the flat side of a boulder while holding her at knifepoint. Two of Goff's friends, who are also now in prison, stood close to watch.

Council to vote on budget cuts today

Administration says meeting may close to public if large crowd shows

By John Hubbell
Staff Writer

Cal Poly administration officials said Tuesday they may attempt to close a meeting where a vote on proposed budget cuts is scheduled.

Today's 4 p.m. meeting of the President's Advisory Council, to be held in room 301 of the Administration building, is scheduled to address cuts in each of the university's seven schools.

The council must vote to approve or reject recommendations made by deans and Cal Poly Vice President for Academic Affairs Robert Koob. It may also alter them.

In 1991, a similar Advisory Council meeting played host to several speeches and presentations by students whose majors were to be severely impacted by cuts.

Vice President Koob said earlier in the week he is hoping to avoid the meeting becoming a "show" and has requested each department send only one representative.

If a large group shows up, an attempt to close the meeting may be made, said Bonnie Tuohy, Koob's administrative assistant.

By California law, the meeting is required to be open to the public according to sections of the Bagley-Keene Act and Section 89901 of the California Education Code.

If the proposed budget is approved today, it will then be given to Cal Poly President Warren Baker to approve or alter and then pass on to the CSU Chancellor Monday, Koob said earlier this week.

Cesar Chavez opens civil rights week

By Romina Vitols

Farm workers advocate and labor reformer Cesar Chavez will commence Civil Rights Awareness activities at Cal Poly next week.

Chavez, the president and co-founder of the United Farm Workers of America, will speak on "Farm Workers in the '90s" on Wednesday, May 6.

Although students may not see Chavez's relevance to their situations, political science professor Phil Fetzer said Chavez's background is definitely relevant to what's going on today.

Today, "there is a lack of leadership in our country that people are frustrated with," Fetzer said, "and we can see this in the national campaigns in which a lot of voters are not satisfied with the candidates."

Basically, people are looking for a change.

According to Fetzer, Chavez is a person who applied his own commitment to non-violent change and really "took the power back."

Fetzer believes a lot of State water will not strain students

By Bryan Bailey
Staff Writer

The City Council's decision to accept state water shouldn't put any financial burden on Cal Poly students who live on or off campus, officials said.

According to San Luis Obispo Utilities Director Bill Hetland and Cal Poly Plant Operations Director Edward M. Naretto, the decision will have little if any effect on on-campus residents and result in only slight increases in water rates for community residents.

Naretto said that students living on campus would not be affected at all unless the university decided to buy state water from the city.

"We're still looking at the possibility of getting state water for the university," Naretto said. "Within a couple of weeks we'll make a decision."

That decision, Naretto said, "wouldn't affect students at all in terms of a fee increase."

"We get funded through the state for all our utilities," Naretto said. "Obviously, it's going to take money from the state treasury to fund it. Somewhere along the line it will affect students (indirectly) in terms of the amount of money allocated to the state that is available (for education)."

Students living off campus, however, will deal with the impact of the council's decision just as any other resident would, Hetland said.

In order to raise the estimated $1.8 million-per-year needed to pay for San Luis' projected allotment of 3,000 acre-feet of state water annually, the city will pass

Hussein's troops build roads to battle rebels

MASHMASHIYEH, Iran (AP) — The army is draining swamps and throwing roads across the vast marshes of southeastern Iraq so its tanks and heavy artillery can join an intensifying attack on Shiite Muslim guerrillas, the rebels said Wednesday.

Shiite leaders based in Iran said some 36,000 Iraqi soldiers launched a three-pronged attack April 15 into the expanse of swaying 10-foot reeds, date palm thickets and murky waterways meandering among thousands of islets.

They said the offensive was the third attempt in two months to crush the rebels, who fled to the swamps after the army defeated the Shiite rebellion following President Saddam Hussein's loss in the Gulf War.

Rebel commanders said they have about 10,000 fighters armed mainly with AK-47 automatic rifles and other light weapons captured from the Iraqis. They estimated 200,000 civilians also are hiding in the 6,000 square miles of marshes, living off fish and whatever supplies the guerrillas can get to them.

There was no way to verify the rebel claims.

A reporter visiting the marshes saw no rebel wounded being ferried to the rear, no reinforcements or supplies moving westward toward the combat zone. There was little sense of urgency.

Baghdad denied last week that it had launched an attack. U.S. State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said Tuesday that "there are indications of increased fighting in southern Iraq."

Drop in Catholicism due to counting error

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. Roman Catholicism, the nation's largest religious body, last year registered its biggest loss ever in what was termed a statistical fluke.

It was "caused by different methods of reporting introduced over the last year by some dioceses," said the Rev. Kenneth Doyle, media relations director for the U.S. Catholic Conference in Washington.

Computing church flocks is a mixed, variable process among the denominations, and Doyle said indications were that instead of a Catholic loss, there may actually have been a gain.

The new statistics showed the church's membership at 58,267,424, down by 300,591 from the year before. But hinting at a warp, more than that total was lost by one archdiocese — Los Angeles — which changed its counting system.

Whatever the reasons, the decline amounted only to about half a percent, considering the church's large constituency, reducing Catholics to 22.8 percent of the country's population, compared with 23.2 percent in 1990.

The figures were issued in the 1992 edition of The Official Catholic Directory published by P.J. Kenedy & Sons of Wilmette, Ill., giving updated statistics for 1991.

They showed that the number of nuns for the first time had fallen below 100,000, dropping to 99,337, or 1,974 fewer than the year before, and the number of priests edged downward by 86 to 52,287.

Ranks of the sisterhoods have been cut nearly in half over the last two decades, their numbers decreasing each year from a peak of 181,421 in 1965.

Jury acquits officers in King beating trial

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — A jury acquitted four Los Angeles police officers of assault Wednesday in the videotaped beating of other three defendants of all other charges. A mistrial was declared on the undecided count.

"What kind of message are we sending around the world? That you can beat someone like Rodney King was beaten and get away with it?" Los Angeles City Councilman Nate Holden, who is black, said after the verdicts.

The defendants hugged relatives, shook hands with attorneys and slapped each other on the back.

"Very happy," Powell told reporters. "It's hard to be surprised when you felt that way...I know I'm innocent and that was the verdict."

Black community reaction was stunned disbelief.

"I grieve for America," said Rose Brown, 43, of Los Angeles who came to the courthouse for the verdicts. "I think this is appalling."

Before the verdicts, black community leaders in Los Angeles urged calm at whatever decision came.

The jury reported the split on the excessive-force count against Powell was four guilty votes and eight not-guilty votes after three days of deliberation on that count alone.

Acquitted completely were Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officer Theodore Briseno and Timothy Wind, a rookie officer who was fired after the beating. A hearing to decide whether to prosecute Powell on the undecided count was set for May 15.

Students help special athletes' dreams come true

By Krystn Shrieve
Staff Writer

The air is filled with excitement. The thunderous applause is almost deafening. All eyes are on the athlete, and as he lights the torch, silence falls over the crowd. A single voice rings out across the field and says:

"Let me win,
But if I cannot win,
Let me be brave in the attempt."

To some people, this is more than just a prayer. It is a solemn oath. It is the foundation upon which Special Olympics was built.

Special Olympics was founded in 1968 and gives developmentally disabled people a year-round opportunity to participate in athletic competitions.

"Our purpose is to let the athletes know that their dreams can come true and that they really can succeed," said Mary Ellen

"You build something together and create a strong bond. It's a beautiful thing."

Jennifer Taylor,
computer science

Gibson, area director of Special Olympics.

The Special Olympics area meet will be held at 10 a.m. on Friday, May 1 at Slanson Middle School in Paso Robles.

Jennifer Taylor, a computer science junior and Chris Jones, a social science junior, are two of the gymnastic coaches for Special Olympics.

"There is something very special about teaching the athletes something and watching them achieve it," Taylor said. "You build something together and create a strong bond. It's a beautiful thing."

Jones agreed that working with the athletes has been rewarding. "It makes me feel great to see people smile and know that I have been a part of it all," she said.

The events will include track and field, gymnastics, swimming, power-lifting and cycling.

Gibson invites everybody to attend and says that about 900 volunteers will be helping out with the event. "Volunteering can change your life, there's no question about it. You learn that you can make a difference," Gibson said.

Taylor said that volunteering has changed her life. "Sometimes I think the athletes helped me more than I've helped them," she said.

"They are so positive and I come out of practice feeling good about life. It's so uplifting, almost like a religious experience. You really feel like you did something wonderful with your day," Taylor said.

"Coaching Special Olympics is the best thing I've done during my college career."

Members of Gamma Phi Beta, a Cal Poly sorority, plan to volunteer their time at the area meet. "Helping other people can make you feel good too. It gives you a purpose in life," stated Cathy Moss, an English senior and public relations chairperson for Gamma Phi Beta.

Lisa Thomson, a liberal studies sophomore and resident adviser in Sierra Madre Hall also explained how her residence hall has supported Special Olympics.

"We held penny wars and other fund-raisers and were able to donate over $600. It's a great feeling to know that we have been able to help," Thompson said.

Debbie Drumm-Hall has been a Special Olympics coach since 1972. Although she is the teacher, she said the athletes have taught her a lot as well.

"It's overwhelming what they've given me. They have an incredible love and zest for life and a constant quest for more," said Drumm-Hall.

"The simplest of things give them the greatest pleasure. They have given me a sense of pride and accomplishment. They have taught me to love life," she said.

Three-day celebration showcases Asian cultures

By Ken Kaplan
Staff Writer

Cal Poly Asian students and clubs joined together this week to give the rest of the students and administrators on campus a taste of various Asian cultures.

The three-day event, titled Asian Awareness Week, featured a variety of activities and demonstrations in the University Union.

Gener Abella, a 21 year-old electrical engineering junior, said the primary goal of the event was to heighten awareness of Asian cultures on campus. He and the other event organizers hoped to work together in uniting Asian campus clubs under the theme "Asian awareness."

"All basic cultures are different," Abella said. "This is the kind of awareness we want to promote."

The eight clubs participating in Asian Awareness Week were: the Pilipino Cultural Exchange, the Chinese Students Association, the Chinese Cultural Club, the Korean Students Association, the Vietnamese Students Association, the Indian Students Association, the Asian Engineering Association and Tomodachi Kai, a Japanese cultural club.

The festivities began on Monday in the U.U. with Artifacts Day. Each club displayed rare artifacts and items which included a "hands-on look at Asian clothing," Abella said.

Tuesday was Performance Day with cultural dances performed by members of several groups. Abella said he was happy with the demonstration and that there was a "good crowd" on hand to view the dancers.

"We put on a show for the people in the U.U.," said Duong Do, an aeronautical engineering freshman. The dances represented each respective culture, Do said.

Tuesday's activities included a sampling of different Asian specialty foods. Each club prepared a dish which was combined into a popular combination plate. Kim Chee, a spicy Korean pickled cabbage and Chinese Won Tons were two foods that were offered, Do said. The clubs sold out of food by the end of the day's activities, Abella said.

Do thanked the Home Economics Club for providing the kitchen facilities for each club to prepare its food dish.

The event culminated Wednesday with each club passing out information about their

COMMENTARY

Fear of police: a need for protection from the naive public

By Scott Slawson

I am writing in response to the article written by Glenn Policare on April 20. Glenn, it is obvious from your article that you loathe police and what they stand for. Could it be that you have an inner disgust for those who represent authority? As I read your article I first appreciated your generalization of all police officers taking advantage of their power.

What a clever subliminal message. Now, I am not saying that all police officers, past and present, are saints. Yes, there have been some bad apples and as the old saying goes, "some bad apples spoil the bunch." But, let's have a reality check. Should we stereotype and label all police officers as criminals due to the conduct of a few? If this was the case, all ministers are prostitute-chasing hoaxes.

Well, I hope you would agree that this is untrue. So why are all police officers part of a "goon squad?" In the Christopher Commission's report of the Los Angeles Police Department, it was found that 44 officers out of 8,400 used excessive force.

This figures out to be about 1/2 percent of the entire police department which does, by the way, still recruit from the human race. (And we all know how perfect the human race is.)

I would like to pose a question to those of you who think the police are always up to no good. Keep track of how many names you can recognize in this question. Do you know or have you ever heard the names Darrell Lunsford, Tina Kerbrat, Rodney King, Gary Howe or Charles "Randy" Champe? Probably all of us, unless we live a life free from the news media, have heard about poor Rodney King.

Remember, he was the decent ex-con, er, I mean citizen, who was safely driving down the highway and was brutalized by the Los Angeles police with the help of the California Highway Patrol. Can you believe it! He was merrily bringing cookies to his sick grandma, when the "goon squad" pulled him over without even a courteous "Hi," and began beating and pummeling him fifty-six times.

This was the view from our wonderfully unbiased news media. Maybe what some of you don't know is that poor Rodney was an ex-con arrested for robbery, served time in prison, tried to run over his girlfriend, tried to run over a vice cop and was caught with a male prostitute.

Of course, the prostitute was dressed as a woman so it makes Rodney look a little more decent. When first pulled over, Rodney showed signs of being under the influence of PCP. Now to those officers, they have a large man who, if indeed intoxicated with PCP, could easily overpower three or four officers. If they had been overpowered, he could have easily grabbed one of their service revolvers and killed himself, bystanders or those evil policemen.

In return, they would have been forced to shoot Rodney and it would have been even more horrendous for those involved. Instead, they tried to follow the escalation and de-escalation of the force policy. They first tried to smother and overpower Rodney. He threw them off like dolls, further enhancing the officer's belief that he was on PCP.

Next, they tazed him not once, but twice. Both with absolutely no effect. Again, further enhancing their feelings about the PCP. Next, he ran toward an officer who luckily got the upper hand and knocked him into the ground. Now, all he had to do was obey the simple orders and lie face down. It never happened.

Rodney was always positioning himself into a position of advantage over the officers. I don't know what part of "lie face down, feet apart" Rodney didn't understand. So they continued to keep him down with their batons, for if he got up, who knows what a large superhuman person on PCP could do?

But we can look optimistically at this and say to criminals everywhere, "Get smashed on PCP, drive recklessly, endanger lives, disobey and fight with the police and you will be exonerated!" But enough on poor Rodney.

Back to my question. Do you also know Lunsford, Kerbrat, Howe and Champe? Probably not. But don't feel bad. They were hideous police officers who lost their lives in the line of duty. But who cares? There will probably be less brutality cases out there.

Did the media convey to you, the public, 32 consecutive nights (like the King beating coverage) how Los Angeles Police Officers Champe and Howe maneuvered their disabled helicopter away from a crowded school into a nose-dive of death, sacrificing their lives while they saved many children?

Or 32 nights of coverage of rookie LAPD officer Tina Kerbrat being shot in the head by a poor transient as she stepped from her police vehicle. Or even the 25 nights of the live footage of Texas Trooper Darrell Lunsford being jumped, kicked in the head and shot with his own service revolver by three down-on-their-luck drug dealers?

Oh, well, we can always watch the Rodney King trial. How many days in a row has it been covered on live television? Forty-some?

Citizens should realize police officers don't know who you are. You could be the nicest guy in the world, or the deranged escapee from the Atascadero State Hospital. But you have the upper hand, unless you are inebriated or high on something. You see the badge, gun, uniform and can assume that they are police officers.

It always surprises me to hear someone cry about police brutality when they provoke the situation in the first place. Such is the case with the "demonstrators" at the infamous "Poly Riot." It would have been ideal for the officers to either just let the looting and fighting continue until everyone was tired, or let the "demonstrators" pelt them with bottles and bricks until they ran out of ammunition.

But the "goon patrol" decided to arrest the "peaceful" and happy crowd. Boo Hoo!

So in closing, Glenn, I have two suggestions for you and people who think like you about our police. You can either; (1) downgrade your defiant attitude and instead of "seeing red" every time the men in blue are around, relax, stay in control and act cordial like a human being should, or you can (2) not call out and rely on the "goon squad" the next time someone is plunging a knife into your heart because he wants your wallet.

Don't even let the thought enter your mind because, heck, they may take advantage of their power and join in on the stabbing.

Scott Slawson is a physical education freshman.

President Baker must be a leader NOW

The issue: Cal Poly President Warren Baker's lack of leadership.

Let's face it, as leaders go, Warren Baker is a thoroughly wretched president.

And during these trying times, that has become more than brutally clear.

If ever there was a time when Baker needed to descend from his mighty fortress and publicly address the dire concerns of this university, it is now!

Students, faculty and staff are once again facing an ugly future as cut after cut, year after year, Cal Poly slowly wanes to a mere skeleton of its former educational ideal.

The proposed elimination of the home economics and engineering technology departments is just the latest in a series of policy decisions that demand attention from our leaders.

Yet, where is Baker?

Considering the frenzy of confusion and concern generated by the current budget cuts, it is incomprehensible that he has made no effort to publicly lead us through these difficult times.

The only public response Baker gave to members of either department, or for that matter, to the student body in general, occurred after home economics students stormed his office physically demanding answers.

And then, the best he could say was, "I have not had a chance to see the proposals, and I need some more time."

Where has this man been?

Does he live in a vacuum? Does he walk the two blocks from his house to his office completely oblivious of the carnage around him?

Of course, Baker has demonstrated in the past that his vocal chords do indeed work, but only when it is in his own prestige-seeking self-interest.

When the IRA athletic fee referendum was being considered, Baker came out vocally in favor of athletics, pledging to support whatever the students decided.

And get this, he was easy to reach for interviews and even issued a public statement immediately after the passage of the referendum.

But where the HELL is his statement now?

President Baker, we urge you to step out of your stale office and meet the people. Show your commitment. Speak to the people and give them meaningful and forthright answers.

President Baker, we urge honest, reasonable PAR-TICIPATION.

We urge leadership. It's your job, remember?

Puente mambos for Cinco de Mayo

Latin jazz legend to stir up SLO for Mexican holiday

By Jennifer White
Staff Writer

The king of Latin jazz music, Tito Puente, and his Latin Jazz All-Stars will be mamboing their way into Mott Gym this Tuesday.

Puente, a world-renowned master drummer, percussionist, pianist, saxophonist, vocalist, composer, arranger and orchestra leader has popularized Latin music throughout the world.

He has performed worldwide at locations including the United States, Latin America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Japan.

The music Puente and his Latin Jazz All Stars will be performing consists of a wide variety of Latin styles, ranging from the slow tempo of the Cuban cha-cha and the slightly upbeat mambo to the conga and rumba, guaguanco, charanga and merenge rhythms.

His music also incorporates rhythm and blues and straight-ahead jazz with a Latin beat.

Laugh lessons at comedy school

Loose Change teaches tricks of the stand-up trade

By Ken Kaplan
Staff Writer

Imagine this scene. You're sitting around late at night watching Short Attention Span Theater on the Comedy Channel. You've got loads of homework to do, but just can't seem to pull yourself away from the television. The comedian doesn't seem that funny, and you vow to yourself that you could do much better.

Well, now you have your chance.

The Loose Change Comedy Troupe and the Sweet Springs Saloon in Los Osos are offering an open microphone and comedy classes for those aspiring closet comedians who want to have fun and share a few laughs.

Comedy Night in Los Osos begins at 7 p.m. every Wednesday at Sweet Springs Saloon. The entertainment begins with stand-up comedy provided by local, amateur comedians, said Art Westerfield, manager of the Sweet Springs Saloon.

It continues with a performance by the Loose Change Comedy Troupe, the brainchild of comedian Michael Passarelli, the troupe's producer and director.

The troupe specializes in improvisational comedy, Passarelli said.

"No one has ever tried to

"It's damn hard to make empty chairs laugh."

provide a forum for local comedy," Westerfield said. "Sweet Springs provides an opportunity for locals to develop talent — to develop their craft."

Passarelli formed Loose Change in 1982 in Hollywood as a troupe called Two Dollar Bills. The troupe performed at the Comedy Store and the Improv, both in Los Angeles.

Sam Kinison was a friend of Passarelli's and performed with the Troupe in its early days.

Passarelli said he was shaken by Kinison's death and said "it brought all the memories back." He said he felt Kinison, through his comedy routines, helped to educate people on issues such as the homeless situation and hunger.

Passarelli moved the troupe to Los Osos in 1987 because he wanted to leave the L.A. area, he said.

He said he feels there are not enough comedy clubs in this area.

There is never a set lineup of comedians at the Loose Change performances, and more than 40 people have performed there. The lineup includes doctors, nurses, homemakers and students, Passarelli said.

"It's something they always wanted to do," he said.

For the aspiring comedian, Passarelli offers comedy classes each week at Sweet Springs.

"Improv is the art of taking a few elements and putting together a story," Passarelli said. "Once the audience is involved, you can take them anywhere."

Passarelli said he uses three basic rules to teach his pupils the art of improvisation.

He tells them first to listen to the audience. "When you listen, you react — not act," he said.

Second, he tells them that they should always agree with the other actors and run with the situation.

Finally, they should work to add new information to the story. "That's where the comedy comes out," he said.

The classes are offered every Saturday at Sweet Springs and cost $3. Stand-up comedy classes run from 10:30 a.m. to noon and improvisation classes are offered from 1 to 2:30 p.m.

Passarelli said he hopes to develop an audience for comedians in this area.

"It's damn hard to make empty chairs laugh," he said.

Aside from training at the basic skills of comedy, Loose Change is also offering its performers a chance at glory.

Most recently, the troupe held a 13-week comedy competition at Sweet Springs, culminating April 15, that awarded the winning comedian a five-minute slot onstage at the Hollywood Improv comedy club.

The next competition offers the winner a three-minute slot on Star Search.

At Sweet Springs, competitors have three minutes onstage to make the audience laugh.

Pat Farley and his parrot puppet sidekick get some stand-up practice.

"If your not funny in three minutes, your not funny in 10 minutes," Passarelli said.

As one of his goals in directing Loose Change, Passarelli is committed to raising food donations through the troupe's work for the San Luis Obispo County Food Bank. He serves on the board of directors of the Food Bank.

People can bring six cans of food, preferably baby food, to get into the club, or they can pay the $2 admission fee.

The program has raised "hundreds of tons of food over the last four years," Passarelli said. "It's a way to teach people what the Food Bank is."

The troupe has also held pie-throwing contests, using whipped cream that has passed its expiration date, to raise money for the charity organization, Passarelli said.

"We try to salvage food and get it into the hands of people who need it," Passarelli said.

Now a Sweet Springs regular, Westerfield said the comedy night began in December, but didn't really catch on until a couple of months ago.

Westerfield stressed that his club does not want to compete with Bob Zany's Comedy Club, located in the Embassy Suites Hotel, and that Sweet Springs caters to local talent.

"There is no place for home-grown talent besides Sweet Springs," Passarelli said.

Bob Zany's features professional comedians who are touring nationally.

Westerfield said the audiences for comedy night feature a real cross-section of the population, including students and entire families out for an evening of entertainment.

"It's a pretty wholesome experience," Westerfield said.

Sign-ups for aspiring comedians take place at Sweet Springs from 6 to 7 p.m.

The saloon offers an all-you-can-eat spaghetti dinner on Wednesdays for $3.95, and children are welcome to attend until 9 p.m., when the club changes to a 21-and-over age policy.

After the amateur comedians and Loose Change perform, the club features Karaoke singing until midnight.

Poly professor's cello recital features Brahms, Prokofiev

By Christy Halderman
Staff Writer

A Cal Poly music professor will give her first on-campus solo cello recital Sunday.

Jeanne Crittenden, a part-time professor, will perform a free recital in room 218 of the Davidson Music Building at 3 p.m.

The recital will also feature pianist Bruce Marshall, violinist Pam Dassenko and violist Carole Mukogawa.

The recital will include pieces by Mendelssohn, Prokofiev and Brahms. Each piece will last about 25 minutes, Crittenden said.

As well as teaching the cello part-time at Cal Poly, Crittenden is also a member of the faculty at Westmont College in Santa Barbara.

In addition, Crittenden is the principal cellist of the San Luis Obispo County Symphony and the Pacific Chamber Orchestra, as well as the assistant principal cellist of the Santa Barbara Symphony and the Santa Barbara Chamber Orchestra.

Crittenden's career in music began at age 3 when she began playing the violin, she said. She began playing the cello at age 7, and switched to playing it full time at age 10.

Crittenden said her favorite part about music and playing the cello is the "wonderful form of expression it gives you. You can take pieces and create something of your own."

She said some of her favorite kinds of performances are small, intimate recitals, similar to what Sunday's performance will be. She especially enjoys playing chamber music, she said.

Marshall has performed in recitals and as a soloist with the Ventura County Symphony and the Music Academy Orchestra, according to a recent press release.

Dassenko has played with the Riverside and Redlands symphonies and is a member of the San Luis Obispo County Symphony and Mozart Festival.

Mukogawa has performed at the San Luis Obispo Mozart Festival, and has served as principal violist for the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, California Chamber Symphony, American Ballet Theatre and Joffrey Ballet, the press release stated.

Jeanne Crittenden performs Sunday at 3 p.m. in room 218 of the Davidson Music building. For more information about the recital, contact the Cal Poly music department at 756-2406.

Dazed and disoriented, Knight was found wandering through a residential neighborhood an hour later by a fellow Cal Poly student.

Two months later, she would be sitting on a witness stand in a courtroom filled with strangers, describing the day's events in excruciating detail.

It wasn't easy.

"I felt really numb, like I couldn't feel my body in that I was actually sitting up there," Knight said.

"I felt really scared and I felt like a little kid. But I didn't want him to see me (break down) because I didn't want to look weak."

"So I tried to come across as strong and really together. But inside I really just wanted to cry," she said.

"It felt like when they would ask me a question, it took me forever to answer and I wasn't making any sense. I was told (later) that I made perfect sense and everything I said was fine," Knight said.

"But I was so numb that I felt like my body was up there and my mind was speaking, but I was nowhere around."

Knight credits the San Luis Obispo District Attorney's Victim Assistance program for lessening the trauma of testifying, preparing her for the experience long before the trial itself began.

"They were really supportive and told me exactly what was going to happen," Knight said.

"They were with me the whole time and allowed me to have my therapist to sit with me on the witness stand."

In some cases, rape victims can be subjected to harrowing cross-examinations which attempt to discredit their testimony.

In West Palm Beach, Florida, for instance — where William Kennedy Smith was tried and acquitted — state law found the victim's past sexual history admissible.

But local sexual assault prosecutors say California law isn't as lenient.

And in Knight's case, attacker Goff had pleaded innocent not to the rape itself but to a related weapons charge.

The defense asked her only to identify him as her assailant.

Knight believes the news media has been "pretty fair" in its handling of celebrity rape trials and advocates the publishing of victim's names — should the victim be willing.

"I think it's the woman's choice," Knight said. "In my case, (prosecutors) never asked me if I wanted to have my identity concealed. I would have said, 'No, it's fine with me.'

"It was important for me that people realized this happened to somebody, not just a 'victim,' and that they be able to identify it with a person and a face and know this really happens to people."

"I kind of contradict myself because I do think (not naming victims) furthers the stigma, and I do wish that all women would feel open to having their names and pictures printed. But I also honor that some women don't want that. That's fine, too."

Her anger now evolved into pity for Goff, Knight's simple resuming of life has become its own catharsis.

Goff won't be eligible for parole for 20 years.

But Knight will graduate in June and, one month later, marry her boyfriend of seven years.

She plans to return to her home state of Hawaii and begin teaching. Her head won't be hanging low.

"They always say something good comes out of bad, and it's true, I really believe it. Even though the bad was pretty horrible, there's been a lot of good that's come out of it. I feel like I'm a much more aware person... and more sensitive to other people."

"I'm much more active now in things I believe in. I vote now. Just little things like that."

"I remember when I thought he was going to kill me. I remember thinking, 'Oh my god, I haven't written my mom in the last two weeks and I didn't call my dad last week.'"

"All these things went through my head. So now I make sure I do all of them."

young people are looking for that kind of leadership.

Political science professor Larry Martinez said there are other reasons to attend the event. "Students ought to listen to Chavez not only because he's a well-known figure in the civil rights movement," Martinez said, "but also because Latinos are going to be the largest ethnic group in California within a short number of years."

Chavez will begin his talk at 7 p.m. in Chumash Auditorium. Admission is $3 for students and senior citizens, and $5 for the general public.

"I watched it on TV and I figured if they could do it, I could do it too," Carrari said. "It takes a lot of patience, skill and dedication, but you just have to stick with it."

Gibson said the main goal was to help the athletes bring out the best in themselves. Throughout the years, she has hoped to teach them how to have spirit, skills and courage.

"We take the athlete, put them in a uniform, give them a bat and let them play ball. It's a real day in the sun for our athletes. The winning or losing doesn't matter, it's just important that they try."

on the burden primarily to the customers, Hetland said.

"We're estimating about a 14 percent increase in rates," he said, emphasizing that this figure and the estimated cost of $608 per acre-foot are both "very rough estimates" at this time.

"We sat down and looked at what it would take to generate about $1.8 million in new revenue," he said, "assuming that (the city) returned to about 90 percent of what (its) consumption was before the drought."

"We were looking at about $7 a month for a single family residence," he said.

Another way to raise revenue to cover state water costs, Hetland said, was to institute a connection fee which developers would have to pay in order to connect their projects to city water lines. The $2,600 fee is already in place, he said, and "will continue to help cover the cost of state water."

Naretto said that Cal Poly, which would pay the city directly for its share of the water, would purchase state water as a kind of "insurance." The university would gain flexibility in its use of possible water sources, Naretto said.

"We have Whale Rock Reservoir, and we also have some ground water," Naretto said in describing Cal Poly's primary water sources.

Should these sources be affected by future drought, he said, the availability of state water would enable the campus to avoid having to ration its water resources.

The state water, Naretto said, "is going to be expensive water, there's no question about that — but it's better to have expensive water than no water."

CIVIL RIGHTS

that civil rights are "everybody's business."

Civil Rights Awareness Week was created by the Committee on Civil Rights Awareness, a group which was started a few years ago by Fetzer and a handful of students.

Fetzer said committee members now include faculty, students and staff who created the week to increase the understanding that civil rights are not just a matter of black and white.

What began as a one-day event in 1990 has grown into more than a week's worth of awareness activities and presentations.

This year's theme is "De Colores," the name of a Mexican folk song that celebrates the beauty of many colors.

Fetzer said it is an appropriate theme since civil rights affect people of all colors.

Larry Martinez, a political science professor, said civil rights are also becoming hostage to a declining budget.

"As the economic pie grows smaller," Martinez said, "the population becomes more sensitized toward any special treatment of groups."

The result is that groups are in competition with each other, Martinez said, and a gain for one group is seen as a loss for another.

"The student body has become increasingly ethnically diverse, more than doubling its nonwhite population growth in the past decade," said Cal Poly President Warren J. Baker in a press release, "and it is crucial for all of us to be sensitive to and aware of cultural differences."

Baker said civil rights awareness activities provide an excellent opportunity for students to broaden their perspectives.

Civil Rights Awareness Week officially runs from May 11-15, although related events begin May 6 and end May 17.

respective cultures and club's activities.

Abella said the event signaled the beginning of a unity of all the Asian clubs on campus.

Cal Poly will soon have a chapter of the Asian Pacific Islanders Student Union, Abella said. The Union is a statewide organization that holds an annual conference at a California university. The 1992 conference was held at San Diego State.

Abella said he was "very happy" with Asian Awareness Week and that there was a lot of interest in the cultural activities in the U.U.

"If we touched one person," Abella said, "I feel we have done our job."

Firms, groups debate recycling potential

By Joe Cohen
Staff Writer

A forum on recycling will be held today at 10:30 a.m. in Chumash Auditorium.

The debate will feature representatives from Pro Earth, SLO Garbage, Clorox, Coors and other industrial, governmental and educational experts and will concern plastics, packaging and recycling.

The main topic at the forum will be how to gain insight on conserving resources and the vast potential in plastics recycling.

The debate will be the highlight of what is known as the Fifth Annual Plastics, Packaging and Recycling Symposium which began Tuesday and will continue through today.

"By having the students ask questions we will hopefully educate all levels of students and the companies involved may learn something also," said David Barton, finance chairman of the symposium.

There will be 60 displays and presentations about innovations in plastics and packaging and recycling technologies, with people available to answer all questions and listen to student input.

Lynn Diehl, KSBY Action News, will mediate a debate.

The event is free.
